Unit 1 - Follow-up Activity

1. My name

My name is Luis. I think it is easy for most foreigners to pronounce, but it might be a little more difficult for some people in Asia, depending on their native language. It is an international name used in many Spanish-speaking countries.

2. My nickname

My nickname is Pukiti, and it is related to video games. People started calling me that about two years ago. It started while I was playing FIFA, also known as EA FC. Every time I was about to shoot at the goal, I shouted "Pukiti!" My friends started calling me that, and the nickname stayed.

3. Learning English

I think I am a good language learner because I use different methods and try to practice often. I read articles on apps like News in Levels and watch grammar videos on YouTube with native speakers. I also ask AI to create exercises for me.

To improve my listening, I watch movies and videos in English and listen to audiobooks at a level I can understand. Whenever I can, I practice speaking with other people. Even my job interviews in English have helped me learn.

4. My habits

Two good habits I had were reading often and practicing English regularly. I still have these habits, and they help me keep learning.

I used to eat dinner very late, but it started causing problems. I changed this habit by eating earlier, and I feel much better now.

Another bad habit is spending too much time sitting at my computer. I still do this, but I can improve by taking short breaks, stretching, and walking more during the day.

5. My personality

I think INTP describes me best, but I also identify with some parts of ISTP. According to the book, INTPs are logical, independent, reserved, and curious. I agree with this description because I enjoy learning new things and understanding how things work. As a software developer, I also identify with the technical skills described in the ISTP profile. Sometimes I prefer exploring ideas, while other times I prefer practical solutions. For this reason, I see parts of myself in both profiles.